

Taking Jung Personally

Writing Psyche's Story

With Marlene Schiwy

Presentation October 22, 2021 7:30pm PT on zoom

In the early days of November 1913 Jung wrote in his journal – the second volume of the recently published Black Books – “My soul, where are you? Do you hear me? I speak, I call you – are you there? I have shaken the dust of all the lands from my feet, and I have come to you, I am with you. Oh, that you must speak through me, that my speech and I are your symbol and expression!” While The Collected Works of C. G. Jung give us Jung’s theory, the Black Books provide the deep soul story out of which his conceptual work evolved.

In this presentation we will ask our own souls to speak to us through writing, as Jung did. Proprioceptive Writing is an evocative process that engages our inner world in depth and prompts us to express thoughts and emotions, intuition and imagination as they take form within us while we move the pen across the page.

During the course of the evening we will take Jung’s words personally, and enter into a dialogue with our own souls.

“In finding our own story, we assemble all the parts of ourselves. Whatever kind of mess we have made of it, we can somehow see the totality of who we are and recognize how our blunderings are related. We can own what we did and value who we are, not because of the outcome but because of the soul story that propelled us. That story is our individual myth.”
